Welcome to your year

You do not need a completely different life before you can make a thoughtful plan. Begin with the life you have: the people you care about, the responsibilities you carry, the hopes you have set aside, and the time that is actually available to you.

Faith & Focus gives you a place to bring those things together. Prayer makes room for honesty. Planning turns an intention into a next step. Reflection helps you see what needs to change. Use these pages as support, not as a scorecard.

This is a personal planner. You can print the pages you need, return to unfinished pages, or start again in the middle of a month. A blank space is an invitation to begin; it is not evidence that you have fallen behind.

A word or short phrase I want to carry into 2027:

Make the planner work for you

Start with the yearly values pages, then choose no more than three outcomes for the next quarter. At the beginning of each month, read the theme and choose one practical experiment. At the beginning of each week, make a short plan that respects your real capacity.

Try a ten-minute weekly appointment with yourself: look back, check the calendar, choose priorities, and identify the help you need. If the week becomes crowded, reduce the plan before you abandon it.

For home printing, select the pages you want and print at actual size when possible. Use the fit option if your printer clips an edge. Print one test page before a large batch. Reusable pages may be printed again for your own personal use.

- Use a pencil or a favorite pen; elaborate decoration is optional.
- Choose one place to capture commitments, then transfer them to your calendar.
- Leave open time for travel, preparation, rest, and unexpected needs.
- At a difficult moment, name the next manageable action rather than rewriting your entire life.
